If I had this class as an interface would I need to add IMyService to the constructor. If so how should I go about it? A: The best approach is the one that is the most specific. If you can give more information about the scope of IMyService, it would help to determine which approach is better. If IMyService is part of another assembly, and you know that MyService exists in the same assembly, then you should just use the IMyService interface and be done. If IMyService is part of some other assembly, and you know that MyService exists in the same assembly, then you should use the IMyService interface, and inject IMyService. Seating remanufacturing Seating remanufacturing is the refilling or reconditioning of an existing seating product or components thereof. It is a good option for the disposal of older production lines, and is in some cases a preferred way to upgrade quality of production. The seat can be refilled by simply replacing components such as slats, backs, frames, coil springs or foam which are more easily replaced than remade. The quality of the replacement components and materials can vary from simply being taken from a new seat or used seat parts, through to the quality of the original components. In many cases this is not easy to determine, and even if it is, quality is not a guarantee
